GOOD PASTURES NEED DILIGENT MANAGEMENT WINTER PLANNING MAKES ALL THE DIFFERENCE

BY MARSHA HEWITT

If you want lush, green pastures for your livestock for years to come, now is the time to get started.

Lee Van Vlake, Clemson Extension's livestock and forages agent, conducts a series of pasture management workshops around the state. His message is that properly managed pastures can provide nutrition for livestock—cattle, horses, and goats—on a year-round basis.

By far the most important thing landowners can do to improve their pastures is to take soil samples. "Without knowing what kind of soil you have, and what nutrients it needs, you're kind of shooting in the dark," Van Vlake said.

Rotational grazing is a key management tool. Many cattle and horse operations use continuous grazing—in which pastures are grazed full time without rest—but that does not allow the forage to be optimized.

With rotational grazing, pastures are divided into smaller areas. One portion is grazed while the remainder rests. This practice improves long term he said. But using intensive rotational grazing can reduce the acreage to 1 to 1.5 acres per animal. Traditional "under-managed" pastures require 5 to 10 acres per animal unit.

The whole farm should be designed to ensure efficiency, he said. Good pastures need a mix of cool and warm season grasses, the use of both permanent and temporary fencing, and a design that puts watering and feeding areas near the center of the paddocks.

"A new system should be designed so that additional fences can be included if needed. Also make sure you have shaded areas in each paddock."

Van Vlake recommends the use of a sacrifice paddock to avoid overgrazing. "Horses on wet pastures create mud, compact the soil, overgraze, and trample grass," he explained. "Designate a smaller area to keep livestock off of wet pastures." Sacrifice lots can vary in size, but they should provide a minimum of 500 square feet per horse.

Typical overgrazed pastures show compacted soil, exposed tree roots, and bark gnawed off trees.

Lee Van Vlake points out steps to reclaim a ditch in the middle of a pasture.

production, rebuilds plant vigor, and allows the nutritional needs of livestock to be met efficiently.

Van Vlake's recent seminar in Bishopville was aimed at horse owners. Asked about the stocking rate, or the number of animals that can be supported entirely on pasture, he replied that the answer varies depending on management.

"The rule of thumb is one 1,000-pound animal per 2 to 4 acres,"

He offered a few interesting facts on forage choices. "Forget alfalfa. Forget orchard grass. Forget timothy. The two best grasses for horses in this state are Bermuda grass and Bahia grass."

Bermuda must be sprigged, which is expensive, and it is slow to establish. Coastal, Tifton 85, Russell, and Alicia give higher yields, higher quality, and are good for hay production. Bermuda should be planted shallowly in the spring after the soil has warmed to 65 F, which is generally mid-April, but it can be planted as late as early July.

While Bermuda is a higher quality forage than Bahia, it does not tolerate overgrazing, drought, flooding, or a poor fertility regime.

Bahia, on the other hand, tolerates denser sod, has a longer grazing season, and is less susceptible to insect and disease pressure. Good options are Pensacola, Tifton 9, Tifquick, and Riata. While it

AG TECH TRENDS IN 2019

Like other industries, agriculture has been transformed by technology, and it appears to be trending in the right direction.

All across our industry are signs of cutting-edge procedures and equipment that give us a new focus on agricultural technology. As a result, we see a concerted effort by government, investors and innovators to transform current ag operations.

As is quite often the case, we have challenges other industries don't face – we deal with technology that drastically changes the way food is produced. And consumers' awareness of our practices is playing a vital role in continued development.

For example, genetically modified organisms have been around for decades, but only recently have GMOs gotten pushback from people who don't understand them -- or the technology behind them. Without GMOs, our crop yields would be drastically lower. No one bats an eye at selective breeding, which is a form of genetically modifying plant material and animals. We just do it at much greater speed now.

Through biotechnology, we can actually edit DNA to help fight diseases. Who doesn't want that? Fighting diseases that attack plants is a logical step is to improve crop yields. The US already has the highest acreage of GMOs in the world. By 2020, the bioproduction industry is expected to reach $100 billion.

Two other trends emerged from a look at where ag technology is going: Millennials are the path to change, and precision agriculture will have a greater impact on small farms.

Millennials are well-versed in technology and can apply those skills to agriculture. I know of several examples across South Carolina where software experts are applying their skills to production agriculture. Accustomed to analyzing data, they don't question using technology to modernize farming.

We tend to associate advanced technology with large farms, but it is predicted that 15 percent of small farms will leverage precision ag tech by the year 2020. GPS, sensors, UAV drones and other autonomous vehicles can help farms become more precise in managing crops and livestock.

The main block to implementing this tech can be the price tag, but technology always becomes more affordable. Ag tech has the potential to revolutionize farms of all sizes, and we look forward to seeing how it impacts the agriculture industry in South Carolina in the years to come.

GOOD PASTURES NEED DILIGENT MANAGEMENT

can be seeded, Bahia is slower to establish than Bermuda grass. It is more tolerant of overgrazing, low fertility, and high traffic.

“If you are not going to take soil samples or put out lime, and not manage the grass intensively, Bahia grass will win every time,” Van Vlakte said.

Rotational grazing allows part of the pasture to recover from too many animals.

TWO ESSENTIAL RULES OF GRAZING MANAGEMENT

1. Avoid grazing until plants have reached an average height of 6 to 8 inches.
2. Remove livestock and rest pastures when plants have been grazed down to 3 to 4 inches.

Yield will be increased if the forage manager removes animals when half of the plant has been eaten. The rest time allows the plant to double production.

FARM BUREAU ACCEPTING APPLICATIONS FOR AG AID FOUNDATION

As a result of recent weather-related disasters and in response to the catastrophic flooding caused by Hurricanes Florence and Michael, the South Carolina Farm Bureau Federation created the SCFB Agricultural Aid Foundation to assist farmers in recovery from natural disasters.

“Farmers in South Carolina are no strangers to hurricanes, flooding and natural disasters, especially after what we’ve experienced in the last few years,” said SCFB President Harry Ott. “They are the backbone of this state and this fund allows us to show them our support in their time of need.”

To be eligible, farmers should complete the application, farm in one of the affected primary or contiguous counties as designated by the USDA, and provide documentation of loss. Applications are due by April 5.

The funds are available to all farmers, whether they are members of SCFB or not.

Contributions to the a 501(c)(3) charitable foundation are also being collected. Contributions are tax-deductible and can be made by check or online.

For more information, visit scfb.org/AAF.

NOMINATIONS SOUGHT FOR ENVIRONMENTAL AWARENESS AWARD

The State of South Carolina is seeking nominations for an award to recognize individuals who are doing extraordinary work for the natural environment. Nominations will be accepted through February 28.

The S.C. Environmental Awareness, now in its 26th year, was established by S.C. General Assembly in 1992 to recognize outstanding contributions toward the protection, conservation, and improvement of the state’s natural resources.

The public is invited to submit nominations. The awards committee considers excellence in innovation, leadership, and accomplishments that influence positive changes on the environment.

The instructions and nomination form can be found on the S.C. Seagrass Consortium website.

MASTER POND MANAGER COURSE BEING OFFERED

Clemson Extension is offering a Master Pond Manager course on March 25. The program provides management strategies to stormwater and recreational pond owners and managers through on-line classroom and hands-on field training. Field days will be held in Florence and Lake City.

Participants can complete the full Master Pond Manager recognition training, or earn a Letter of Completion in Recreational or Stormwater Pond Management. Those who finish the full Master Pond Manager course will receive three Category 5 pesticide CEC hours. Registration ends March 18.

The course content includes: Recreational Pond Design and Construction, Stormwater Pond Design, Inspection and Maintenance Limnology, Water Quality, Integrated Aquatic Plant Management, Best Management Practices for Stormwater Ponds, and Fish Management.

For more information and to register, visit clemson.edu/mpm

WEBINARS CONNECT LANDOWNERS WITH FORESTRY EXPERTS

Clemson Extension is partnering on a program to equip South Carolina landowners with the knowledge to manage their woodlands by connecting them with forestry experts via locally based webinar sessions.

The Woodland Stewards Webinar Series is a regional Extension program that aims to empower woodland owners to make sound management decisions.

Presented by Southern Region Extension Forestry, the program consists of four live webinar sessions followed by a final local session. Led by Extension forestry specialists from across the Southeast, the sessions will cover getting to know your woodlands, managing your woodlands, identifying woodland threats, wildlife and woodlands and more.

Sessions will be from 7-9 p.m. on Thursday evenings from Feb. 21 to March 14 at various locations. The cost is $50 per person.
